In a small-scale exploration, Charge (the scientific platform for Volt Nederland, charge.volt.org) collected the personal experiences of 25 participants with generative AI. Not through interviews or surveys, but with the help of SenseMaker: a participatory method in which people articulate their own experiences and give them meaning. So not just telling stories, but also interpreting them themselves. What affects them? What values are at stake? And who do they think should hear this?

Flight shame (?)

I struggle with making choices as a young, yet also mature woman. Because: the planet will be destroyed if we fly too much, but at the same time, I also want to see the world and I'm a wanderluster. It stresses me out weekly, even daily, to make the right choices, not to shortchange myself too much, but also not to be too harmful.

AI and the Disappearing Voices

A scientist I spoke with recently shared an anecdote with me: he said a publisher had AI write a book and published it under a non-existent author. After the book caused a stir because scientists couldn't identify the author, the publisher admitted it. On the one hand, I think artificial intelligence should definitely be used, but in this case, I'm also concerned. Whose voice is being given a platform in this way, and if this trend continues, who should we turn to for clarification when the authors of our books are non-existent?

Original text: Een wetenschapper die ik laatst sprak, deelde een anekdote met mij: hij zei dat een uitgeverij een boek door AI had laten schrijven en dat onder een niet bestaande auteur had uitgegeven. Nadat er ophef was ontstaan over het boek omdat wetenschappers de auteur niet konden plaatsen, gaf de uitgeverij dit toe. Aan de ene kant vind ik dat kunstmatige intelligentie zeker toegepast moet worden, maar in dit geval maak ik me ook zorgen. Want welke stem krijgt op deze manier een podium, en als deze trend zich voortzet: tot wie moeten we ons wenden om dingen te duiden als de auteurs van onze boeken niet-bestaand zijn?

AI as a thesis assistant

I'm currently writing my thesis and using AI extensively. On the one hand, I'm a bit embarrassed by it, but on the other hand, I think it's also something that fits the times and would be crazy not to use. I still even provide the input, but AI helps with the design, and I think that's perfectly fine.

AI helps shape healthcare, but can also 'hallucinate'

I currently use AI in healthcare (I work as a practitioner and team leader in mental health care). It helps me enormously in summarizing vision documents and research reports for my teams. It also helps when writing a substantive article or chapter. I always ask AI to outline a specific topic and then check if I've forgotten anything it suggests. Occasionally, I use AI to record a conversation, transcribe it, and convert it into a report. This doesn't yet have the desired final quality, and it sometimes fills in information with things that weren't said ("hallucinates"). It's also unclear what my and the client's input was on important decisions, and how informed consent was obtained. In all these cases, I'm unsure whether I can be certain that my input won't be shared with others without my permission. I lack appropriate government policy on this matter. It feels like the field is left to figure it out for itself.

Original text: Ik gebruik AI momenteel in de zorg (werk als behandelaar en teamleider in de ggz). Het helpt me enorm om samenvatting van visiedocumenten en onderzoeksrapporten te maken voor mijn teams. Het helpt ook bij het schrijven van een inhoudelijk artikel of hoofdstuk, ik vraag AI dan altijd om een opzet te maken over een bepaald thema en check dan of ik zaken vergeten ben die AI me aanreikt. Een enkele keer gebruik ik AI om een gesprek op te nemen, te transcriberen en om te zetten in een verslag. Dit heeft nog niet de gewenste eindkwaliteit, ook vult het soms informatie in met dingen die net niet gezegd zijn ('hallucineert'), en er wordt niet helemaal duidelijk wat mijn input en die van de client was op belangrijke beslissingen en hoe de informed consent tot stand kwam. Bij al deze zaken is me niet helder of ik er zeker van kan zijn dat mijn input niet gedeeld wordt met anderen zonder mijn toestemming. Ik mis passend beleid van de overheid hierop. Het voelt alsof het veld het zelf uit moet vinden.

I use generative AI very occasionally, for studying or when I need to look up something that requires more information than just what you can enter in a Google search bar, for example. ChatGPT Usage Balance

I use ChatGPT quite a bit in my daily life, for work, study, and everyday quick questions. Many things simply go faster by simply letting ChatGPT write, summarize, or provide ideas. Because of my frequent use, I'm afraid I'm becoming dependent on it. Recently, I almost had ChatGPT write an entire application letter for me, which I was a bit shocked by. Because of this, I've been thinking more and more lately about not using it at all, but precisely because it sometimes takes away from my work, I find it hard to give it up. Besides, this is the society we live in, so shouldn't we just learn to use it? And that's not even mentioning the other things that make me question my use: the water consumption of this technology, the inherent bias, and the tech giants who profit from it.

Laatst liet ik bijna een hele sollicitatiebrief door ChatGPT schrijven, daar schrok ik een beetje van. Hierdoor denk ik de laatste tijd steeds vaker over na het helemaal niet meer te gebruiken, maar juist omdat het soms ook werk wegneemt vind ik het moeilijk er afstand van te doen. Bovendien is dit nu eenmaal de maatschappij waarin we leven, dus moeten we niet ook gewoon leren ermee om te gaan? En dan hebben we het nog niet eens over de andere dingen die mij over mijn gebruik laten twijfelen: het waterverbruik van deze technologie, de bias die erin zit en de techgiganten die hier geld aan verdienen.

Let AI do the work, "If you hate it automate it!"

I've been using Generative AI everyday for my work as wel a private requests. ChatGPT is genius when it comes to finding syntax issues in big code structures. It also is genius as a generator for code in general. To be really honest, for a lot of request from chatgpt I have no idea how to start with writing the code so I just request a basic frame and build on that. Its also genius for interpreting and writing text, automating a mailbox was never this easy.

For my actual work we also use a lot of generative AI as a way to extract values from large texts. As in, if you have a lot of text in which is a request for an item from a sales website we can use AI to transform this text into usual data. Or the other way around, if there is a dataset with sales orders chat gpt can be used to form a confirmation of the sales order that can be communicated back to the customer.

AI and creative makers: do we still care?

As a journalist, content creator, and idea developer, AI has a huge impact. It makes creativity and imagination less important, because we can always consult AI (ChatGPT) during a brainstorming session, for example. Action Figure

In my LinkedIn circles, there are certain trends in generative AI, such as converting photos to Studio Ghibli style, or more recently, seeing yourself as an action figure. Can I really trust ChatGPT?

My experience relates to ChatGPT, especially its reliability. I use ChatGPT very regularly, but I still often encounter errors and fabrications. That's why I hesitate to rely 100% on ChatGPT's claims. You sometimes find circular reasoning that's practically impossible to escape, which makes people/organizations more likely to surface as answers to questions. This is likely because these experiences also match best online. It's a shame, and worrying, that unusual suspects sometimes don't surface.

It also is genius as a generator for code in general. To be really honest, for a lot of request from chatgpt I have no idea how to start with writing the code so I just request a basic frame and build on that. Its also genius for intreperiting and writing text, automating a mailbox was never this easy.

For my actual work we also use a lot of generative AI as a way to extract values from large texts. ChatGPT Usage Balance

I use ChatGPT quite a bit in my daily life, for work, study, and everyday quick questions. Many things simply go faster by simply letting ChatGPT write, summarize, or provide ideas. Because of my frequent use, I'm afraid I'm becoming dependent on it. Recently, I almost had ChatGPT write an entire application letter for me, which I was a bit shocked by. Because of this, I've been thinking more and more lately about not using it at all, but precisely because it sometimes takes away from my work, I find it hard to give it up. Besides, this is the society we live in, so shouldn't we just learn to use it? And that's not even mentioning the other things that make me question my use: the water consumption of this technology, the inherent bias, and the tech giants who profit from it.

Original text: Ik gebruik ChatGPT best veel in mijn dagelijks leven, voor werk, studie en dagelijkse snelle vragen. Veel dingen gaan nu eenmaal sneller door ChatGPT "even" te laten schrijven, samenvatten of ideeën te geven. Door het vele gebruik ben ik bang dat ik er afhankelijk van word. Laatst liet ik bijna een hele sollicitatiebrief door ChatGPT schrijven, daar schrok ik een beetje van. Hierdoor denk ik de laatste tijd steeds vaker over na het helemaal niet meer te gebruiken, maar juist omdat het soms ook werk wegneemt vind ik het moeilijk er afstand van te doen. Bovendien is dit nu eenmaal de maatschappij waarin we leven, dus moeten we niet ook gewoon leren ermee om te gaan? En dan hebben we het nog niet eens over de andere dingen die mij over mijn gebruik laten twijfelen: het waterverbruik van deze technologie, de bias die erin zit en de techgiganten die hier geld aan verdienen.

AI and the Disappearing Voices

A scientist I spoke with recently shared an anecdote with me: he said a publisher had AI write a book and published it under a non-existent author. After the book caused a stir because scientists couldn't identify the author, the publisher admitted it. On the one hand, I think artificial intelligence should definitely be used, but in this case, I'm also concerned. Whose voice is being given a platform in this way, and if this trend continues, who should we turn to for clarification when the authors of our books are non-existent?

AI helps shape healthcare, but can also 'hallucinate'

I currently use AI in healthcare (I work as a practitioner and team leader in mental health care). It helps me enormously in summarizing vision documents and research reports for my teams. It also helps when writing a substantive article or chapter. I always ask AI to outline a specific topic and then check if I've forgotten anything it suggests. Occasionally, I use AI to record a conversation, transcribe it, and convert it into a report. This doesn't yet have the desired final quality, and it sometimes fills in information with things that weren't said ("hallucinates"). It's also unclear what my and the client's input was on important decisions, and how informed consent was obtained. In all these cases, I'm unsure whether I can be certain that my input won't be shared with others without my permission. I lack appropriate government policy on this matter. It feels like the field is left to figure it out for itself.

Het helpt me enorm om samenvatting van visiedocumenten en onderzoeksrapporten te maken voor mijn teams. Het helpt ook bij het schrijven van een inhoudelijk artikel of hoofdstuk, ik vraag AI dan altijd om een opzet te maken over een bepaald thema en check dan of ik zaken vergeten ben die AI me aanreikt. Een enkele keer gebruik ik AI om een gesprek op te nemen, te transcriberen en om te zetten in een verslag. Dit heeft nog niet de gewenste eindkwaliteit, ook vult het soms informatie in met dingen die net niet gezegd zijn ('hallucineert'), en er wordt niet helemaal duidelijk wat mijn input en die van de client was op belangrijke beslissingen en hoe de informed consent tot stand kwam. Bij al deze zaken is me niet helder of ik er zeker van kan zijn dat mijn input niet gedeeld wordt met anderen zonder mijn toestemming. Ik mis passend beleid van de overheid hierop. Het voelt alsof het veld het zelf uit moet vinden.

The administration's NO service to citizens

Well, look, the other day I went to submit the application to the Madrid City Hall to get married in a civil ceremony. They don't have a date until November, when my ceremony is in August, and the logical thing to do is to get married a few days before to avoid problems with the company and the 15-day honeymoon they're supposed to give you. Not only are they slow, but they also close the City Hall in August. August is when most people get married, so what's the point of that? The City Hall there isn't working to meet the needs of the citizens, obviously. Worse relations with the City Hall, worse democracy.

Ahí la administración no está trabajando de cara a la necesidad del ciudadano, evidentemente. Peor relación con la administración, peor democracia.
